STRIKERS MEET SOLDIERS In Deadly Struggle on the Nevsky Prospect MANY KILLED

Fourteen Killed in Encounter at Moscow Between Cossacks and Strikers.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Another clash between the troops and the soldiers is reported to have taken place last night. The struggle occurred on the Nevsky road, near St. Petersburg. It is said that many strikers and soldiers were killed or wounded.

The Czar's Horse Guards were riding along the Nevsky Prospect when they met the strikers about two miles from the Winter Palace. The clash was immediate. The soldiers charged the strikers, using their revolvers and sabres. The workers responded with bombs, but were quickly dispersed.

At least a violent crowd of strikers is now marching through the town, forcing the workmen to quit work. The strikers have tampered with the telegraph lines, causing interruption in the transmission of dispatches.

54 KILLED AT MOSCOW.
In the fight at Moscow between strikers and soldiers fourteen persons were killed. The struggle began through the streets of the city, following one of the worst storms that has prevailed hereabouts since the famous blizzard of 1888.

Eight persons are dead as the result of the storm, and many others are suffering from exhaustion. It is reported that fully a score of men are in a serious condition. Thousands of men are out today with shovels and horses and carts trying to raise the snow blocks.

Only a few of the street car lines were running to-day, but the subway, which has proved a boon during King Blizzards' away, and the "L" road, were operating.

The schools, like yesterday, were almost attended. The shopping districts was a desert. While there is, of course, intense suffering among the poor, people generally had no trouble in getting food. The strike on all the railroads did not get in and still was scarce.

Trench fighting is being endured in the town.

SAY TROUBLE IS OVER.
A St. Petersburg dispatch today, evidently of governmental origin, says that strike movement is subsiding. The workmen appear exhausted and disheartened by the failure of their strike.

GEORGETOWN WILL ASK FOR TRIAL; SAYS VERDICT WAS NOT ON EVIDENCE

MOTION TO GO BEFORE JUDGES SHELTON AND SHERMAN IN A FEW DAYS.

The first legal move to save Charles Tucker, convicted of the murder of Haled Page, from the electric chair will be a motion before Judges Sherman and Sheldon, the judges who presided at the trial, for a new trial, on the plea that the verdict was not on the evidence.

James H. Valley, senior counsel for Tucker, is now engaged with his associates in going over the evidence of the case, and in the preparation of the motion, which it is expected will be argued within a few days.

The day for leaving the motion has not yet been set. Tucker is now in the jail at the New Haven State Prison, where he has been since his arrest. He is now being guarded by a detachment of the New Haven State Police.

The motion to go before the judges is expected to be argued within a few days. The judges who presided at the trial are Judges Sherman and Sheldon.

Crew of Georgetown, of the Atlantic Coast Line, Taken Off After Night of Awful Suffering in the Rigging—Ship Will Be a Total Loss.

WOODS HOLE, Jan. 26.—The most daring rescue of a shipwrecked crew known off the New England coast in years was that made by the Great Point life savers in saving twenty-five men of the steamship Georgetown, which went ashore at the end of Great Point on Nantucket Shoals.

The steamer, which is owned by the Atlantic Coast Steamship Company, of New York, probably will be a total loss, but her crew, after clinging to the rigging, nearly frozen, all night, are now safe, in the life saving station at Great Point.

HARD AND FAST ASHORE.
The Georgetown, which was bound to Newport News from Portland, struck some time yesterday.

The steamer was so far off the mark that the ship could not be seen from the station. There is a light at Great Point, but it was not seen in the driving snow. The Georgetown struck hard and fast and every sea drew her farther and farther on the rocks. She was so far off the mark that the ship could not be seen from the station.

men were taken entirely by surprise, as the police had permitted them to gather when and where they pleased. They were trapped for slaughter.

They were killed down, wounded, and stabbed, and several were shot at close range as they were trying to break through the lines.

Up to this time there had been a sort of truce between the strikers and the soldiers, but now violence was expected.

Already the city is in a state of terror. The strike has spread until now every street in the city is in a state of confusion. The streets are unclean except for the streets of soldiers and the military and police.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST
80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, JANUARY 26, 1905.

Russia—and Her
Desperate People

Will Empty Hands Succeed Against
Rapid-Fire Guns? Can the Noble
Spirit of Just Rebalis Overcome
Disciplined Murderers?

That is dreadful news from Russia. Every good man in this world watches with sympathy and admiration those desperate people frantically and bravely struggling against murderous odds.

Men and women as brave and noble as any that ever lived sank dead beneath that merciless fire last Sunday.

The creature that calls himself the Czar of Russia was hiding, like the coward that he is, while his Cossack handbitch butchered his suffering people.

But hiding will not ALWAYS protect him. He has hidden before. He hid behind the superstitious Church of which he is the acknowledged head and ruler. He hid behind the superstitious belief of the people in his good intentions. He hid behind the blasphemous religious teachers who uphold him, the murderer, as God's representative and authorized spokesman here.

That hiding behind his people's religious fanaticism and good faith is ended.

Gopon, the excommunicated priest, has led the people to the truth, and to their death at the same time. He was excommunicated by the worthless Russian Church that excommunicated Tolstol also for telling the truth.

The people now KNOW. They have seen those that trusted their "Little Father, the Czar," murdered for their trust in him. The tyrant can hide behind his hypocritical Church no longer. He is hiding in some distant palace now—but the people that have suffered so long will FIND him. He has found some people that his rotten Cossack troops CAN kill. The men that ran before the Japs like butter in the fire can do their "Little Father's" work well when it comes to murdering those that are unarmed.

But the people, in their turn, will FIND what they are looking for. There will be no autocracy in Russia when their search is ended.

This search of the people for that Czar and the brood of drunken murderers called "the Grand Dukes" may be a long one. Many a life will be sacrificed in the hunting down of the vermin that have ruled and butchered so long in Russia.

This revolution may be repressed, and another and another. BUT REVOLUTION ITSELF WILL NOT BE REPRESSED. It will outlive this army and this Czar—even should he live a day for every life he has taken. It will live as long as manhood lasts in Russia, and it WILL GET that royal family, and partly, at least, arrange with justice the debt that the people owe to their "rulers."

A new question is raised in this Russian revolution: CAN THE PEOPLE WITH BARE HANDS SUCCEED AGAINST RAPID-FIRE GUNS?

In revolutions of the past it was man against man. There was little choice in weapons—comparatively. The main advantage of those in power was disciplined troops—an advantage offset often by the troops' own treason.

The French revolutionists took the Bastille. But it need not have been taken by them. A thin little man with reddish hair watched indifferently the early killings of the Revolution. He did not care much. He was not born in France—brought the French just then, in fact. He remarked that with a handful of soldiers HE could have stopped the Revolution at any time.

Very likely HE could have done so. His name was Napoleon Bonaparte, then, and he did. The fool Louis XVI. might have saved himself if he could have exchanged a hundred pounds of his fat for an ounce of real brains. If foreign troops had been sent to back up the cavalry in defending the Bastille, the mob would have been mowed down—and the Revolution might have been delayed. But men were sent with arms in their hands of whom many had actually been born right there in the Faubourg St. Antoine; soldiers that knew the children that went up out of the Faubourg to play in the Place du Trone, that had mothers and brothers in the mob.

These soldiers, so stupidly selected, worked with the Revolution, not against it. It was they that took the Bastille.

For the Russians, embarked in the desperate fight for liberty, much depends on the attitude of the common soldier. The Czar can count on some thousands of Russian troops—the Cossacks, the Mongols, the men of Tartar blood, that enjoy killing anybody.

But many of these willing killers have been killed off already by the more able Japanese killers.

There is the great army of reservists—hundreds of thousands of trained men. If the right leader arises to guide the people, he can call upon these. They are men that have passed through the army and that have learned to hate tyranny. They are brought to arms from time to time and kept in training; that will help greatly if they get on the right side in the battle—and it is safe to predict that they will.

The fight is going to be a hard one—with the arms, the money and the discipline on the side of the criminals in power.

But this is certain: The Czar cannot murder his entire people. He cannot kill, either, the spirit of rebellion against tyranny. He is embarked on a murderer's career, and he or his dynasty must meet the murderer's fate, however long it may be deferred.

The Russians have the sympathy of all the American people. It is to be hoped that they will get from here something more substantial than sympathy.

Swindlers, the man that can really say something, expressed popular feeling in his famous lines concerning the French Emperor, Napoleon III., when, in conclusion, he prayed that he might live to say, "The day is dead."

His lines would suit fairly well the general feeling of the civilized world toward Russia's hideous government now.

LEGISLATURE'S RESPONSIBILITY

Editorial Note: This

This Legislature had it in its power to abolish capital punishment; to wipe from our statute books a stain handed down from Colonial times, when it was "an eye for an eye, even a tooth for a tooth." The Legislature said: "A new commitment I bring unto you, that we have our number." Those who voted to hang Mary Rogers, wholly ignored that thing, and believe in the fallacy of the word as an ally for the murder. Some selfish motives, then, after works of deliberation, voted to continue the brutal practice of sending persons into the next life before their time. I am sure with no greater punishment to fall on those 217 men, than they have been convicted to do, as punishable in any present law, that the Legislature has done more than fast draw and send that they be compelled to bear the deadly them for murderers. Is there anything reformatory in this inhuman practice? Does it tend to live the murderer? Does it prevent further crime? No, at all. Then why not have dropped the vote and put a more humane method? J. J. McCAN, South Scituate.
